SPRING IN THE GARDEN

The first outside café customers of the season – in mid February! Café volunteer Iris cleaned the chairs especially. Our Garden's overseer, Malcolm, had put primroses on the tables. The magnificent magnolia is just coming into flower.

REMINDER – 2019 'SUBSCRIPTIONS' NOW OVERDUE!

If you have not yet paid your 2019 subscription as a Friend of Stuart House (still only £10 minimum!) please do so by the middle of March. Renewal forms are again enclosed with this Newsletter. If you don't, we shall, with sadness, have to presume that you wish to come off our mailing list and no longer receive this Newsletter.

Sue's News

I attended our February Trustees' meeting whilst my mind was still in Madeira where I had spent a happy but exhausting week with two friends. I am thankful to say we did not fall off the steep sides of one of the Levadas (walking a narrow concrete 'gangplank' with a sheer drop on one side did not endear itself to me!) and managed to descend a mountain (52 hairpin bends) without disaster striking although it was very dodgy in places with a narrow path laid to cobbles and rubble - again with a sheer drop on one side.....

.....so – back to business. Much of our recent meeting was devoted to discussing with Sioux the manning of the House administration and the Café. We welcome two new volunteers, Susan Margiotta and Barbara Ford, who will join our existing valued band of café volunteers. We extend grateful thanks to all our volunteers who assist not only with the café but also with reception work and stewarding. If you are able to volunteer in any capacity please give your details to Sioux. We could not function without you.

We will shortly be meeting to discuss the appointment of one or two additional trustees – who would be expected to work with us initially with a view to later formal appointment. A full 'job description' will be published in our newsletter and we hope there will be a flood of suitably qualified applicants! Watch this space for further detail. In the meantime if you feel you have specific skills which you could offer please do let us know.

Sioux is still taking bookings for the Gallery and Jane Room, and there are slots available for this year. If you or anyone you know wants to hold an exhibition or sale please let her know.

Sue Glencross (Hon. Sec.)

The first of our 2019 four-times-a-year Meeting of Friends of Stuart House together with Trustees will be – with due notice - later in the Spring, when the annual accounts are all complete. Although as a CIO we no longer have a formal Annual General Meeting, we wish Friends to feel – and to be – involved in the life of the House.

A successful mixed craft sale ran in the Max Lock Gallery during February. We welcomed several crafters as stewards, including Zoe, here doing beadwork.

EARLY ANNOUNCEMENT

The Friends of Stuart House are planning to stage an exhibition and sale of

CELTIC ART

during the summer of 2020

This advance notice is to enable exhibitors sufficient time to make:

Quilts, Cushions, Woodwork, Craft, Paintings, Jewellery, or any other creative items.

Please leave a note with our House Manager of your interest and planned exhibit(s). Thank you. Eileen Crouch

Henry Rice descends to the Gallery!

For a few weeks, we are bringing the Henry Rice permanent exhibition from the Rowse Room on the top floor of the House down to the Max Lock Gallery.

We hope that this will enable more Friends and visitors to see, or remember, what an important figure Henry Rice was in creating the Liskeard townscape as we know it.

Eileen, one of the original Henry Rice Project team, has, with Sioux, re-hung the exhibition, and is also planning to hang some of Jane Wood's drawings of Rice buildings, which Jane so kindly left with the House.

Liskeard Old Cornwall Society

Friday 8th March 2.30pm. in the Hobhouse Room (ie. the re-named Long Room) of the Public Hall.

Brian Camp will talk about Polperro Writers and Artists.

The OCS Room on the top floor of Stuart House is open on Wednesdays and other times by arrangement.

A WEA 10 week Lip Reading course has made a provisional booking from Thursday 25th April (to be confirmed if numbers are sufficient) so if anyone is interested or knows someone who might be, please spread the word – there are leaflets in the House.

Remember that we do gain essential income by letting out some of our rooms – for both regular and occasional meetings which help the community.

March's Thoughts from our Garden's Overseer

A recent visitor to Stuart House told me how well the laurels, pruned as standard lollipops, give structure and serenity to the garden. I asked if she meant the bay trees, which she did, and which she said are the “true laurels”. The garden hedge sort of laurel, she added, is not in fact a laurel at all, neither is “that so-called spotted laurel shrub growing over there in the corner”.

I went home and sought internet enlightenment: my findings are distilled here. The Bay Tree (sometimes called Sweet Bay or Bay Laurel) is Laurus nobilis, native to the Mediterranean region, and brought here by the Romans. The hedging laurel is Prunus laurocerasus, often called the Cherry Laurel as it has large black (poisonous) cherry look-alike fruit - the stones inside germinate very easily, by the way, if sown outdoors in the autumn. The Spotted Laurel is Aucuba japonica, which makes a resilient, large pot plant, excellent for winter outdoors. Then, amongst others, there's the Portuguese Laurel (Prunus lusitanica), the Chilean Laurel, (Laurelia sempervirens), the Californian Laurel (Umbellularia californica), a tall hardwood tree with scented leaves rather like bay, and the Spurge Laurel (Daphne laureola), which is neither a spurge nor a laurel, but at least does provide some winter scent (it can be rather invasive though).

The botanical ancient Lauraceae family is classified by flower structure. There are an estimated 50 genera and 3000 species world-wide which prefer to live in warm temperate or tropical regions, and most are evergreen. Hence the problem: “laurel” has become a word too broad to be botanically meaningful. So maybe we should agree with the visitor and refer to Laurus nobilis as the true laurel.

In Ancient Greece, winning competitors in athletic tournaments were crowned with laurel wreaths. A 2nd century BC coin shows the god Apollo with such a wreath. Apollo's great love, Daphne, we're told, turned into a bay tree as he approached her, so he used some of the leaves to form a wreath and declared the plant sacred. Julius Caesar was often seen in a laurel wreath, and Napoleon revived this tradition in French revolutionary times. Nowadays, we continue to associate laurels with success. We have Nobel Laureates, Poet Laureates, and Baccalaureates, and there is the saying: “resting on one's laurels” - basking in memories of former achievements.

One valued fact about the bay is that the leaves are not poisonous, so that they're quite safe to give an infusion or flavour to dishes when cooking (although the leaves are indigestible). The Bay tree, originally preferring warmer climes than ours, has over the centuries adapted and is now extremely hardy. If left to its own devices it'll grow into a tall, dense and rather straggly bush, spreading by suckering shoots (see photo). However, it is very forgiving of being regularly pruned to whatever size and shape you chose, and is generally disease free, although in the winter the leaves can discolour and become blistered. I'm not sure if this damage is caused by caterpillars or insects - suggestions are welcomed.

It's the beginning of March, and weed seeds in the Stuart House garden, as everywhere, are sprouting profusely in cracks and crevices. So, if it's time for them to get going, it's also fine to sow hardy annual seeds. It's best to give them some protection though, maybe in a cold frame or unheated greenhouse so that awakening snails and slugs don't feast on tempting seedlings. Malcolm Mort

← The focus on Bay in this month's 'Garden Thoughts' and this poster in the Surgery in the House remind us again of the 'Spotlight on Herbs' festival planned for June.

Chairman Bob will meet those Friends interested in further planning of this at 3pm on Monday 18th March – please do come if you are interested - it does not matter if you've not been in contact before!

Rose Gibbon was the Artist of the Month in the Surgery during February. Her poppy paintings, along with many others, attracted a lot of interest.
